ings over America

The good fight which our air pioneers fought has been continued bravely and unselfishly by countless American Aviators. They have been willing and eager to fight and die, demonstrating the true efficacy of Air Power. With sober optimism it may be said of a war in which Air Power is the decisive factor, America Can Win, Must Win, and Shall Win ultimate victory. . . .

THE OLD

With the reorganization of the aviation setup of the United States Army, on March 9, 1942, has come the latest phase of the development of the nation's military aviation from its groping, experimental days to its present status as an autonomous unit within the structure of the army. The story of the rapid growth of our nation's military aviation, from an unimportant subdivision of the Signal Corps before the first World War, through the period when it was a corps of its own, the Air Corps, and now to a degree of tremendous importance as the Army Air Forces, co-equal in prominence with all the other army combat arms combined, is a stirring saga of courage and inspiration, of indomitable will and far-sighted genius, all within the short space of 33 years.

HISTORY OF THE FIRST AIR FORCE

On 19 November 1940, the Northeast Air District was activated under the command of Major General James E. Chaney. It became the First Air Force on January 16, 1941. This command was part of the Northeast Defense Command, and the responsibility for eastern seaboard defense and planning was charged to the FAF.

On April 9, 1941, by absorbing the Air Defense Command into the I Interceptor Command, the First Air Force assumed the responsibility for recruiting, organizing, and training the personnel of the Aircraft Warning Service, which went into active operation on 7 December 1941. The I Interceptor Command (designated I Fighter Command on 15 March 1942) was the subordinate command chiefly responsible for discharging the responsibilities of the First Air Force for air defense portions of defense plans for the NEDC and War Department defense authorities, and for interceptor and fighter training and operations.

On 1 September 1941, the I Ground Air Support Command was activated at Mitchel Field for developing the tactics and techniques of air support of ground units, developing aircraft and equipment for the same, and commanding all support aviation not assigned or attached to other commanders.

The First Air Force activated the I Bomber Command as of 5 September 1941 "to organize and train a mobile headquarters for an aviation task force prepared to conduct offensive operation of all troops assigned or attached thereto." The I Bomber Command engaged in antisubmarine warfare in liaison with the Navy and headquarters was moved from Langley Field to 90 Church Street, New York City, on 23 January 1942. Administrative control remained with the FAF until 15 October 1942, when I Bomber was inactivated. The Bomber Command remained out of the First Air Force for 11 months. During that interval, the First Air Force, originally a strong bombing air force, with much of its energies concentrated on the experimental development of offensive bombing tactics, had become transformed into a fighter Air Force.

I Bomber came back into First Air Force on 24 August 1943. The return of I Bomber Command with an Operational Training Unit commitment, greatly changed the direction of First Air Force activity. Headquarters First Air Force secured and improved bomber bases, re-established the bombardment A-3 section with emphasis on the training phase, and planned and supervised what was in many ways a new activity. Bomber OTU and RTU continued as one of the major missions of the FAF after 24 August 1943.

By the time of the Pearl Harbor attack, the organization of the FAF into its component commands was complete and functioning. Brigadier General Arnold N. Krogstad, commanding general of the First Air Force, was in addition, Air Force Commander, Eastern Theater of Operations. Successive commanding generals of the FAF held the same dual functions under the ETO and the Eastern Defense Command and felt that "they were answerable to two chiefs," General H. H. Arnold, CG, AAF, and Lieutenant General Hugh A. Drum, CG of the First Army.

Most of the tactical missions which occupied the First Air Force under the ETO were carried out by its already existing subdivisions. The Aircraft Warning System was operated under I Interceptor (Fighter) Command. Antisubmarine operations, in-shore and off-shore patrol, and a formal air and surface vessel convoy system for east coast shipping were carried out through the I Bomber Command and the I Ground Air Support Command. The change from the defensive to the offensive phase of air operations gradually caused most of the tactical units of the First Air Force to be sent overseas, and the defensive measures for the Atlantic Coast to be reduced and stabilized.

On September 10, 1943, the War Department relieved the First Air Force from the command of the CG, Eastern Defense Command, and placed it directly under the command of the CG, AAF.

A Combined Air Defense Training Center was established at Mitchel Field by the First Air Force on 4 August 1943. The mission was to provide overseas theater commanders with units capable of effective combined operations in airdrome defense.

On 17 September 1943, Major General Frank O'D. Hunter assumed command of the First Air Force. Between 20 September 1943 and 31 December 1943 the First Air Force adjusted its strength, equipment, and base administration to its new status of a zone of the interior air force with a replacement training mission. It gave training first priority and built up the authority of the base commanders so that all the facilities of the bases served the training activity. What remained of the defense mission was separated from the training activity and confined to the Wings and Air Regions. Manpower was reduced drastically with permanent party personnel of about 25,000 as the goal. The outlook for 1944 was for a period of economy in manpower, simplification of organization, and concentration on the RTU training mission.

The First Air Force initiated its share of the AAF Redeployment Plan late in 1944. This was the beginning of what will probably become a major activity of the First Air Force. Redeployment of air force units involves the return of a combat unit (usually a group or a wing) from the European Theater, for processing, furlough, and reassembly at another base for transition training to another type of plane or training in tactics applicable to a new theater.

The first large unit processing project handled by the First Air Force was the Redeployment Intermediate Processing of a bombardment group and a service group which occurred at Bradley Field, Connecticut, in December, 1944. On May 22, 1945, the first AAF units to arrive by plane from the European theater landed at Bradley Field.

The Convalescent Training and Conditioning program was originally set up in the First Air Force as directed in an AAF letter dated 2 November 1942. The program was intended to shorten the period of hospitalization and to prevent personnel from being kept out of their units because of loss of training through illness. Programs were organized in every installation of the FAF that had a hospital of more than 100 beds. The activity increased greatly in 1944 and more First Air Force personnel and facilities were devoted to it. The Pawling Convalescent Center, at Pawling, New York, was the most elaborate center. By the end of 1944, Mitchel Field was the only First Air Force installation used both for air evacuation and convalescent training.

On 24 June, 1944, Mitchel Field was designated as a 400-bed Air Debarkation Hospital, where the patients would be landed in Ferrying Division (ATC) planes. This activity expanded so rapidly that in August, 1944, the Air Surgeon suggested that Mitchel Field be used to evacuate patients on a continuous daily flow basis as the most efficient method of speeding up processing and treatment of patients. The Mitchel Field Hospital "mushroomed" from 400 capacity to more than 1,200 capacity and by 31 December 1944, 13,282 patients had been received from overseas by air evacuation and dispatched to specialized hospitals close to their homes. The new system of reporting and evacuation developed here decreases from five days to thirty hours the time between embarkation and evacuation of transportable sick and wounded.

FRANK O'D. HUNTER

MAJOR GENERAL

Commanding General, First Air Force

Major General Frank O'D. Hunter, Commanding General of the First Air Force, with headquarters at Mitchel Field, New York, directs this command's training program for combat replacement pilots and crews. He is also charged with the mission of maintaining the air defense of the heavily populated and industrialized eastern seaboard. For more than a year prior to his assignment to the First Air Force General Hunter was Commanding General of the Eighth Fighter Command in England, where he distinguished himself by introducing into action against the enemy the P-47 Thunderbolt. General Hunter directed the first sweeps of Thunderbolts over Europe during which they were put to the test in fighter combat and as bomber escorts.

A World War I "ace," General Hunter's battle flying experience has been drawn upon heavily in this war both at home and abroad. He has been a fighter pilot all of his Army life, is fifty years old, and a bachelor.

While heading the Eighth Fighter Command, General Hunter organized, trained and moved to Africa the aircraft units which helped give the Allies aerial superiority in the Tunisian and Sicilian campaigns. For the manner in which General Hunter accomplished this mission he was awarded the Legion of Merit. In March of 1944 he received the Distinguished Service Medal for exceptionally meritorious and distinguished service in a duty of great responsibility as commander of the Eighth Fighter Command during the period May, 1942, to August, 1943. The War Department citation which accompanied this award revealed that General Hunter effected the first trans-Atlantic flight of fighter aircraft without loss of life or equipment, and that it was under his direction that the use of the P-47 Thunderbolt was initiated in the European Theater of Operations.

The commander of the First Air Force is known throughout the Army Air Forces for his forthright personality, a trigger-quick mind and a legend of good luck. Reason for the legend can be found in the fact that he's one of few men to sustain a broken back twice and bail out of crippled planes three times, and still be alive.

Throughout a quarter of a century of service with the Army Air Forces, General Hunter has concentrated on pursuit piloting. A pursuit pilot in the last war, in which his audacious flying won him a half dozen citations and gave him an official score of eight enemy aircraft shot down, his knowledge of aviation and fighter tactics were put to important use even before this country entered World War II. In May, 1940, he was assigned to the Office of Military Attache in Paris, as assistant attache. He remained there until, as the Germans advanced into France, the American Embassy was moved out of Paris and set up temporarily in Tours. With the collapse of the French forces, General Hunter again transferred his location, going to Bordeaux, where he caught one of the last boats leaving for England. He remained in England until November witnessing the crucial Battle of Britain between the badly outnumbered R.A.F. and the Luftwaffe. The knowledge gained there, combined with his long experience in pursuit flying, were utilized in combat action two years later when in July, 1942, he was named commander of all American fighter plane units in the European Theater of Operations. General Hunter assumed command of the First Air Force on September 20, 1943.

In July of 1944 he embarked on a round-the-world flying trip with Lieut. General Barney M. Giles, Chief of Air Staff; Lieut. General W. D. Styer, Major General Clayton L. Bissell, Major General John E. Hull, and Major General O. L. Nelson. The purpose of the trip was to inspect military activities and installations in connection with current and future military operations. Over a period of six weeks, the party traveled more than 40,000 miles. A few of the points visited on the route flown were Saipan, China, India, Italy, Bougainville, Egypt, Casablanca, Assam, Australia, Guadalcanal, Hollandia, Honolulu, and Tarawa.

General Frank O'Driscoll Hunter is a native southerner, born in Savannah, Ga. At twenty-two he started his flying career by enlisting in the Aviation Section, Signal Reserve, as a sergeant.

Commissioned a first lieutenant on September 12, 1917, he was soon flying over the front lines in France and was wounded June 2, 1918, on his first operational mission out of the Dunkirk airfield. On this flight he took on two German planes and in return was nicked on the forehead causing a wound that virtually blinded him with blood flowing into his eyes. His legend of good luck began when he was able to make his base safely and land right side up, though even a blazing sun was visible to him only as a red blur.

Later, first in 1923 and then in 1933, came the two cases of broken back, each of which confined him to the hospital for about a year.

For the Dunkirk fight General Hunter was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross in addition to the Purple Heart by his own government and the Croix de Guerre with palm by the French. Subsequently he was given four Oak Leaf Clusters successively to add to his Distinguished Service Cross for extraordinary heroism. On four different occasions he attacked numerically superior enemy formations shooting down from one to two planes himself in each engagement.

In 1943 General Hunter was awarded the Silver Star for a bombing mission over Europe. Shortly thereafter the Distinguished Flying Cross was added to the long list of decorations already his.

General Hunter left the Army after the end of World War I for a little more than a year, but was commissioned again on July 1, 1920, this time in the Regular Army Air Service. During the years that followed he flew about every type of fighter plane that was tested by the Army and moved up through a succession of increasingly important assignments. He was appointed to the rank of Brigadier General on April 20, 1942, and to the rank of Major General on November 30, 1943.

To summarize the list of General Hunter's decorations, they include: the Distinguished Service Cross with four Oak Leaf Clusters, Distinguished Service Medal, Legion of Merit, Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross, Purple Heart, Croix de Guerre with palm, and the Commander of the Military Division of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, generally referred to as the C.B.E. This latter high award was bestowed on General Hunter "in recognition of distinguished service as Commanding General of the VIII Fighter Command in England."

HISTORY OF THE CHARLESTON ARMY AIR FIELD

The day after the attack on Pearl Harbor, General Drum, then Commander of the Eastern Defense Command, called a meeting in New York to make plans for the defense of the East Coast. As a result of that meeting, various Air Corps officers were sent out by plane to take over municipal airports along the coast. On December 11, 1941, a Captain Stark arrived at the Charleston Municipal Airport and announced to Mr. Charles L. Howard, Vice-President of the Hawthorne Flying Service, which had been managing the field, that a part of the airport was required by the Army for coastal operations. Some time later a second officer appeared and stated that it would be necessary to take over the whole airport. Although no document was drawn up at that time to show the change in management, the statements of these officers were accepted in good faith by Mr. Howard.

Early in 1942, organizations started coming to the field to fly anti-submarine missions. They had been sent by various headquarters long before there was any base to take care of them. They lived in tents in a wooded area at the edge of the field or in Santee-Cooper huts, which they themselves transported in sections from the Santee-Cooper Dam project. They learned how to maintain themselves under adverse circumstances, and undoubtedly that training stood them in good stead when they carried the war to the enemy on his own soil.

On March 23, 1942, a formal lease was drawn up between the City of Charleston and the United States of America, granting the Army the full control of the airport but permitting the commercial airlines concurrent use of it. It soon became evident that if a military installation of any importance was to be developed, more land was necessary. The base then set about acquiring various tracts of land adjoining the field.

The base was placed completely under the jurisdiction of the Air Service Command late in September, 1942, and Colonel Hoyt L. Prindle became the first Base Commander. Under Colonel Prindle a period of rapid growth began that continued under other commanding officers and is now reaching its completion under Colonel Louis M. Merrick, who has been Commanding Officer of the Charleston Army Air Field since May, 1944. At first construction work of all kinds was needed—barracks, mess halls, administration buildings, training buildings, maintenance shops and warehouses, and recreational facilities. Most of these had been obtained by the summer of 1943. Most of the land was reclaimed swamplands, and the deep sand of the roads, besides hampering traffic, created a menace to the health of personnel and to aircraft engines and other equipment. A network of asphalt roads was laid late in 1942.

When Colonel Prindle assumed command in the fall of 1942 and for about a year thereafter, the base had the dual purpose of defense and training. Regular anti-submarine missions were flown each day, and air depot groups and service groups—organizations to be sent overseas to maintain and service airplanes in the field—were trained on the base. In September, 1943, however, the mission of the base was changed. Transferred from the Air Service Command to the First Air Force with headquarters at Mitchel Field, New York, the base began to train combat and ground crews for the B-24 Liberator bombers that had been used so extensively in the offensive war against the enemy both in Europe and in the Pacific and Asiatic theaters. The training of Liberator crews remains the primary mission of the field. Pilots, bombardiers, navigators, gunners, radio operators and engineers all get training here before going into combat overseas. Flying is carried on eighteen hours out of each twenty-four, and when the men are not in the air there are numerous classes in the ground school that they must attend. The ground school is well equipped. The newest methods of teaching are employed, and all sorts of synthetic training aids are available for the preparation of the fliers. In recent months the training has been improved by the use of instructors who have actually served in theaters of operations all over the world and know exactly what combat with the enemy means. That these men have served with distinction is evident from the number of decorations given out at the regular Saturday reviews on the field.

In recent months the base has assumed a secondary mission—the refueling and maintenance of the C-47 planes used in air evacuations. Hospital ships dock at the Port of Embarkation, and men who have been wounded overseas are transferred to Stark General Hospital for examination and treatment. As soon as practicable they are sent to hospitals near their homes. Some of them are sent out on hospital trains, but many are evacuated by air, leaving the Charleston Army Air Field on the above-mentioned C-47's.

The history of the Charleston Army Air Base is probably not very different from that of many other fields taken over by the Government after Pearl Harbor. Its development coincides with the progress of the war from the defensive to the offensive stage. For reasons of security, the full story of its passage from a rather small municipal airport to one of the largest training fields of its kind in the country cannot be told at this time, but the field is an important cog in that vast machine called the Army Air Forces.

HEADQUARTERS
CHARLESTON, S. C.

To the Officers and Men of the Charleston Army Air Field:

The purpose of this field is to turn out the best four-engine combat crews possible. To this end the officers and men have worked unstintingly. In the year that has passed since I assumed command of the Charleston Army Air Field, progress has been made along many lines. Numerous buildings have been erected, much fine training equipment has been installed, training aids have been devised through your own ingenuity and resourcefulness, teaching methods have been constantly improved, and administrative efficiency in various sections has increased. It has indeed been a rewarding year.

And now the battle is half-won—but only half. Bringing the war to an end will mean many days of long and arduous work. You who make up the personnel of this field are conscious of the effort that is still required in order that we may be able to turn out the best-trained combat crews in the world. I am sure that you will continue to give your fullest devotion to the job.

In the days of peace to come, it is hoped that the record of your service on this field as depicted in this book will afford you pleasant memories of a job well done.

LOUIS M. MERRICK

COLONEL

Commanding Officer

Colonel Louis M. Merrick, who became Base Commander of the Charleston Army Air Field on 9 May 1944, was born in Washington, D. C., and attended Phillips Andover Academy and Yale University before beginning his career in the Regular Army.

Colonel Merrick has had long experience in the Army Air Forces. Enlisting in the Signal Corps as a flying cadet in 1917, he was commissioned a second lieutenant in February, 1918. After serving as a pilot in the last war, he was assigned to Carlstrom Field, Florida, and Brooks Field, Texas, as a flying instructor and stage commander. In 1923 he was transferred to Bolling Field, Washington, D. C., where he was Operations Officer. Since then Colonel Merrick has been Commanding Officer of a bombardment group at Langley Field, Virginia; Executive Officer of the First Bomber Command, Mitchel Field, New York; Commanding Officer of the Gulf Task Force, Gulf Sea Frontier, Miami, Florida; and Commanding Officer of the First Fighter Command, Mitchel Field, New York. He also served in Charleston from January to June, 1942—at a time when the personnel of the Charleston Army Air Field were still living in tents, maintaining themselves under adverse conditions, and leaving few written records behind them. At that time Colonel Merrick was stationed at the Navy Yard and served as Liaison Officer for the First Bomber Command. He came to the Charleston Army Air Field in May of 1944 from Boston, Massachusetts, where he had been Wing Commander of the Boston Fighter Wing. Colonel Merrick has had over 6,000 hours of flying time in all types of Army planes and is rated as Command Pilot and Combat Observer.

VICTORY

Cpl. John McIntyre, NEWS WING editor, pecks away at an electric typewriter for next week's issue. The paper has never missed a deadline since its first appearance two years ago. CAAF GIs look forward to it as much as they do their dinner. And the editors never get tired.

CAAF Observes V-E Day Quietly; Col. McIntyre Says

Observance of V-E Day at the Charleston Army Air Field was with seriousness and sobriety. Major McIntyre, commander of the air base as a day with the successful conclusion of the war, said here.

A week's work is almost completed as the paper comes rolling off the press. Billy Espy, one of the Espys who contribute the manual labor, puts NEWS WING through the final run.

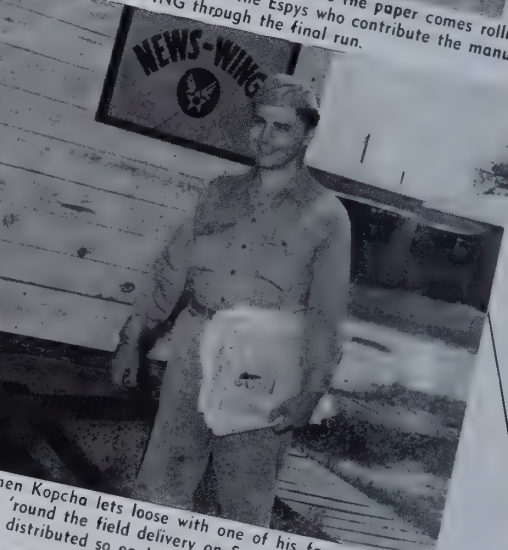

Sgt. Dana Oliver interviews an overseas veteran just back from Europe.

And out comes the VICTORY issue. The "extra" was in the hands of the readers two hours after President Truman announced Germany's defeat. Here Associate Editor Stephen Kopcha and Feature Editor Dana Oliver gather around Editor John McIntyre to look over their efforts.

At 12:01 a. m. Europe's war all hostilities cease. Churchill said, "the cease-fire along the front and rear." He was resisting the Russians, he was doing so after midnight tonight, and the protection of the laws of the quarters by Allied troops.

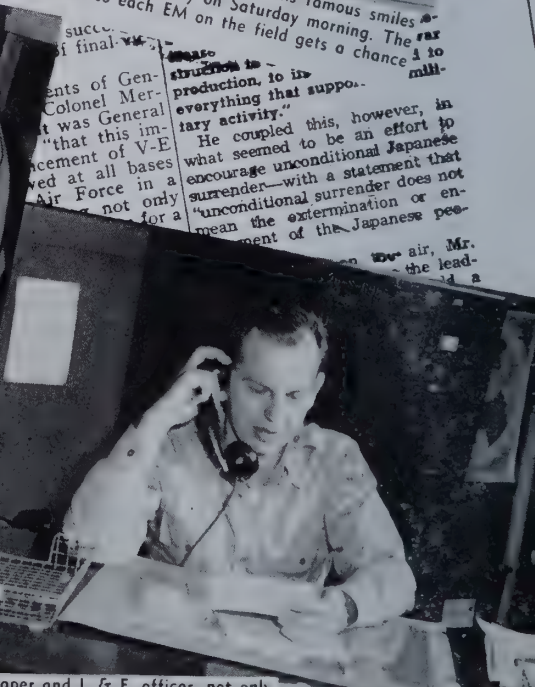

those who view the down-fall as a reason for let-down, with the fact that let-down cannot help but result.

Pfc. Stephen Kopcha lets loose with one of his famous smiles as he begins his 'round the field delivery on Saturday morning. The 3,000 copies are distributed so each EM on the field gets a chance to see one.

At the lino-type machine, where NEWS WING actually gets started good, sits Bryant Espy getting "copy" ready for "proofing."

Lieut. Russell S. Ende, newspaper and I. & E. officer, not only supervises the paper but "runs down" leads for hot stories, as evidenced in this "shot" at his desk.

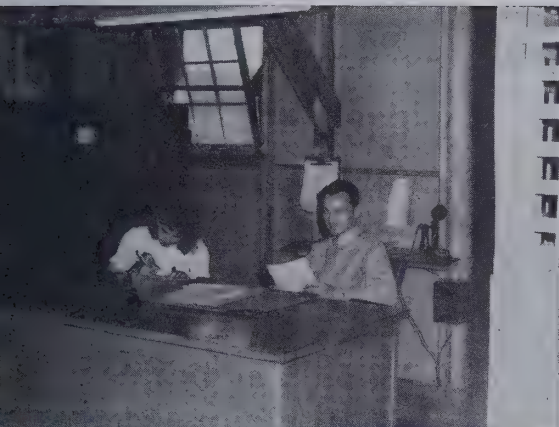

Colonel Wissuri,
Director of Administration and Services.

Lieutenant Crawford, Lieutenant Nuttle, Major Klug, Lieutenant LeFar,
